Community Health Workers Sally Wilson, Project Access of Durham County Andrew Herrera, Curamericas	Curamericas recently received a grant from the North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services (NC DHHS) to work with Community Health Workers (CHWs) around COVID related needs. Andrew Herrera is the Executive Director of Curamericas, which is based in Raleigh. The NC DHHS grant was released in July and the application process moved quickly. Curamericas went through their existing partners and recommendations. The original start date was August 1 but funds were awarded August 7. The purpose of the grant is to deploy 150 CHWs in 25 counties across the state. Details are still in the process of being finalized.

	The key is for CHWs to provide services to their neighbors and communities through training and access to technology. As part of the grant, each Community-Based Organization (CBO) will continue their normal activities and add COVID. The funds need to be spent by December 30, 2020. The State mandates that grant recipients work with their local health departments. The CHWs as part of this grant will implement NCCare360. The outcome measures will be how many people have you served and how many have received services, in addition to others. The State has decided the primary focus will be Latinx and African American communities because they are most impacted. It is up to agencies to work to keep CHWs safe. There is no requirement to meet people face to face. Most of the work will take place virtually. The grant will support CHWs, not provide financial support for clients. CHWs will have to think creatively, problem solve and elevate concerns to their supervisors. There will be a learning curve. The role of the CHW is to link people to services through NCCare360 and close the loop. This is a short-term sprint. This doesn't allow for long-term planning for sustainability. Curamericas has thought about how to build capacity of organizations through training but organizations are stretched. Andrew will continue to advocate for sustainability planning at the state level. Curamericas is not comfortable mandating how each CBO operates. They think of this as a grass roots initiative to providing funding, training and resources to CBOs. Client identification is still in development. CBOs will work with clients. The health departments may be involved in providing referrals. Curamericas is still in talks with multiple CBOs and are working on finalizing contracts.
